Course Description:

When we study sociology we study ourselves. Many of the topics we discuss and the readings in this course will speak to some aspect of your experience. Sociology can help to provide the language to understand what we go through in our lives and how we are connected to other people. “Sociology is the study of social life, social change, and the social causes and consequences of human behavior. Sociologists investigate the structure of groups, organizations, and societies, and how people interact within these contexts” (American Sociological Association).

This five week course is designed to provide a general introduction to the discipline of sociology. The course is divided into fifteen sections. First, we will try to understand what sociology is and what it is that sociology studies. Second, we will examine different types of inequality in society, including race, class, gender, sexuality, and disability and learn how they affect people's lives. Third, we will explore the workings of a variety of social institutions, including the economy, politics, religion, the family, and education.

Course Requirements:

Each class session will be a combination of lecture and student discussion. Students are expected to attend class, complete the assigned readings in advance of the class meetings and participate in discussion.
