Class Hours: This course will have 52 class hours, including 32 lecture hours, 8 professor office hours, 8 TA discussion session hours, and 4 review session hours.

Course Objectives:

The course is an introduction to the history of twentieth century architecture from 1900 to present. It will explore the implications of different conceptions of the twentieth century architectural history as an ongoing discussion about the appropriate architecture for the modern period. In the previous era, canons were used to identify the paradigms of excellence, but not easy in the twentieth century as they proved short-lived. In addition, it was an era of development and growth of new materials, technologies, and dominant economic systems. Students will develop visual literacy in the forms and trends of modern architecture of the period in question. Deeper analysis of the buildings within historical, social, cultural, political and technological contexts. The students are expected to read the assigned materials prior to coming to class and write short 1 page summaries of the readings that may include additional analyzed and annotated images.

The objectives are to enable students to:

- develop a set of conceptual and visual tools for analyzing buildings and architectural images;
- develop a historical sense of major periods and how architectural design responded to changes in cultural, social, political and technological forces.

Format:

For most weeks, you will be required to read secondary sources in preparation for that day’s presentation and then read various primary sources in class that will either support the lecture or provide an alternative perspective to specific topics. There are also days that will focus primarily on a discussion. The discussions are based on article-length readings. I will utilize other media and experiential-learning exercises when and where it is appropriate. There will also be weekly field trips to local Chinese buildings, landmarks, and museums to reinforce the course content.

Grading Principles

As a baseline, students are expected to attend class, ask questions, and actively learn inside and outside of the classroom. Thus, the grading components and scale above are rigid. As we wish to maintain a position of objectivity, no extra credit or “round-ups” will be given to individual students.

Homework and Project Guidelines

- Label everything accordingly – student name/number, class, assignment, date, problem numbers, where appropriate – at the top of every page.
- Complete the assignment with a professional mindset. Presume that your work will be reviewed by a coworker or community stakeholder who knows absolutely nothing about your project; hence, you will need to note every assumption, parameter, and reference and draw attention to the major steps of the process.
- Include a reference for every technical claim, statistic, and non-intuitive equation or coefficient used in your homework and project submissions. Ideally, this reference should be to a professional code or peer-reviewed reference such as the literature listed above. Once again, this practice will make a coworker’s or stakeholder’s review at a later date much more efficient and quality-controlled.
- Where needed, check each term for dimensionality and whether units are consistent. Wherever possible, perform proper unit conversions.
- Numerically label any working figures, diagrams, charts or tables in your submissions.

- Since developing professional-level communication skills is a major component of this course, mistakes in spelling, grammar, and general “sloppiness” of submitted or presented work will result in a lower grade, even if the technical work is sound.
- Homework and project submissions are due at the beginning of class. Out of respect for the teaching assistants and your classmates, late homework is not accepted. I suggest handing in partial homework should you find yourself in a situation in which you have expended your time. Genuine emergencies will be considered as valid excuses, though with close scrutiny.

You are all students at one of the most prestigious universities in the China, and you are expected act accordingly. Please complete your assignments on time and with integrity. Any violations of these principles will be, at a minimum, reflected in your grade for the course. All students are expected to read and comply with the Academic Code of Honor.
